Opening Reception: Saturday, March, 5–8 pm

David B. Smith Gallery is thrilled to welcome San Diego, CA-based Peruvian artist Sylvia Fernández for her first solo exhibition with the gallery, The Illusion of Paradise. Featuring stretched paintings mounted back-to-back and suspended throughout the Main Gallery, themes of paradise as an emotional and physical territory, nature as solace, and the potential for optimism are among the many paths laid out in the exhibition.

Corporeal experience, informed by internality and influenced by personal subjectivity, registers immediately upon entering The Illusion of Paradise. Floating throughout the gallery, as if sifting through a floating archive, viewers experience Fernández's dreamlike compositions like flashes of forgotten memories. Tracing our attention over a ghostly, shadow-cast embrace, whispers seem to be audible. The senses come alive in The Illusion of Paradise, aided by a layered presentation of works that mimics the strata of perception on a journey inward.

In her works, imagery capturing a painterly fascination with light and the majesty of the natural world is visually described with moonlight refracted through space, ripples of running water glistening in the dark, and overgrown flora rustling as branches obscure further view. The works are quiet, meditative, and possess an aura of shrouded meaning. For Fernández, nature serves as an inspiring space to belong and a connection for rescue. A native of Lima, Perú—now a California transplant going on four years—Fernández describes being in constant awe of light—studying its endless opportunities for meaning and metaphor. An interest in states of consciousness and embodied female experience is a natural outgrowth of the artist's exploration of light and shadow, which can serve as illuminating or obstructing.

In English, an illusion is a deception, a false perception or belief. In Spanish—Fernández's mother tongue—ilusión has a double meaning, one that includes a sense of excitement and hope and a positive emotional state. This duality resonates with Fernández, as it allows for internal exploration of light as a respite from the uncertainty and fear that is omnipresent in contemporary life.

Between dappled moonlight catching on raindrops, undulating silhouettes, and enigmatic flora and fauna, Sylvia Fernández's The Illusion of Paradise offers a tangible exploration through a hanging garden of canvases, where spiritual reflection, self-discovery, and the beauty of the unknown thrives.

Territory, Land, 2025, oil on canvas, 84 x 60 in. (213.4 x 152.4 cm)
